AMESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Members,

The fall semester is moving quickly, and if you're anything like me, you blink and it's over! Much has been taking place over this semester in NAKHE and committees continue to meet and make progress. If you're a NAKHE member, you will have received an email for a call for nominations for president-elect, vice president-elect, and secretary-elect. These are crucial leadership positions within NAKHE, and I would encourage all of you to consider nominating yourself or nominating someone else you believe would serve in one of these important leadership roles. More information on those positions and nomination packages is below.

Our conference planning continues, and we are expecting perhaps record numbers attending in January. I'm particularly pleased that our Social Justice/Diversity Committee have been able to award several travel scholarships to faculty at HBCU institutions. Our Future Directions Committee will also be hosting a town hall at the conference to report on their findings regarding our NAKHE name and how it translates overseas. A big thank you to Martha James-Hassan for her efforts this year in preparing for what will be an extraordinary conference!

Event Information

A free, professional learning opportunity. All NAKHE Conference registrants are welcome.

Building on the work of social justice scholars in physical education and movement science, this workshop includes practical movement strategies that physical educators can use to promote self-awareness, self in relation to others, and strategies for engaging in critical dialogue with others for the purpose of understanding similarities and differences between all people. Activities include bodywork, breathing and grounding strategies presented by an international group of scholars. Participants will engage in activities and critical dialogues related to their own experiences with the bodywork.

This pre-conference workshop is supported by the NAKHE Hellison Interdisciplinary Research Grant and the grant will support up to 6 hotel rooms (one night per room) for participants to come in early for workshop.
